Showing respect to your elders plays an important part in Vietnamese culture. Younger family members are expected to be polite, helpful, and obedient to their elders. Usually, older people live with their adult children and their grandchildren, and the family takes good care of them. This is because the family has a significant meaning in Vietnamese society. Older people are often kind and patient and love to have family gatherings where everyone can spend time together. These gatherings are a chance for the family to catch up and share stories, and celebrate important events like birthdays, wedding anniversaries and festivals.

In Vietnamese families, older people seem to be wise teachers who can give useful advice and guidance to their younger family members. They are respected not just for their age, but for their contributions to their family and community.

In short, respecting older people holds a crucial place in Vietnamese culture. It is a way to maintain social harmony, honour the elders' contributions to the community, and pass on traditional values and customs to future generations.

Question 28. The word "significant" in line 3 is OPPOSITE in meaning to _____

D. To maintain peace and balance in society.

Question 30. What does the phrase "to catch up" probably mean?
A. to cook and enjoy delicious meals together.
B. to update each other on what has been happening.
C. to teach children how to behave towards their grandparents.
D. to learn how to be kind and patient.

Question 31. According to the text, what is the common habit in Vietnamese families?
A. Older people avoid family gatherings due to their age.
B. Multiple generations live together in the same household.
C. Younger people don't have enough time to spend with their parents.
D. Adult children live independently from their parents.

Question 32. What is the passage mainly about?
A. The importance of respecting the elderly in Vietnamese culture.
B. The role of traditional families in Vietnamese culture.
C. Vietnamese elders' efforts and contributions to their family and community.
D. Different ways to show respect to Vietnamese older people.
